Thank you for downloading DMD: FR-909.

This is a new capture/take on the ever-popular TR-909, combining outboard vintage NOS tubes and body compression in parallel. Those two signals were then combined and fed into a high-end mastering equalizer to further glue, shape, and focus the sound.

I decidedly opted for a slightly more "driven" quality on the FR-909 to offer a different flavor to a previous DMD release, Hi-Fi 909. Hopefully you find the chosen processing really brings out the depth and energy of the unit. Every sound within FR-909 was processed with the same outboard chain, allowing for a consistent glued sound when used together.

Additionally, this collection is created to have fun with. I'm getting great results just loading the samples and gently EQing the channel master out of the sampler (program/hardware). Traditionally, I would've broken out 10 sub-channels and spent hours fiddling with EQ + compression. Now, within minutes, I can tweak the drum buss to make room for synths, bass, and/or vocals or implement a desired overall curve that is genre specific. So, if your habit is to automatically compress/EQ individual drum hits, try instead using drum-buss EQ and compression with FR-909. See if it works for you... if not, individual channel EQ hasn't gone anywhere.

Also included in your download is the new DMD:MD collection demo. DMD:MD contains 2,184 new samples synthesized and captured from a MachineDrum. Additionally, the collection contains the Hi-Res (24/44.1 and 24/96) versions of DMD FR-909 for a combined total of 2,733 samples.

DMD:MD and DMD FR-909 were created together over an 8 month period of full-time effort. The MD Collection shares the same processing and design philosophy as FR-909, allowing them to be married seamlessly in compositions and the mix. But don't just take my word for it, try them together and see if you enjoy the results.
